“ I discovered about this yesterday despite it happening so many years ago. I told the following story to a friend and then thought I should look up Sherry to share and see if she remembered.

Here is the tale, more or less: "8th grade English class in Las Vega, teacher named Mr Casteneda. He was always stern before and after this. One day, mid lecture 10am on a cool morning, classroom door open, he abruptly stops. He says that he hears someone outside. He goes out and comes back in to tell the class that a guy is messing with cars. He goes out and comes back to say that the guy has a bow and arrow. He goes back out and yells at them half-heartedly. Nervous laughter around the class. He comes back in to say that he's going to stop them. Goes out again, and then come back in with a crazy dramatic expression clutching his face and has a Steve Martin arrow through his head. It was hysterical."

Sherry and I always sat together. She turned to me laughing so hard that she couldn't breath (the whole class was doing so) and in a high pitched voice "How could he do that? Why does he do that?". It was so funny and so joyous. Sherry was such a bright and wonderful person to know.

I wish that I could have shared this with her. I share it here hoping that it may warm someone's heart
